MY REFLECTIONS OF THREE HUNDRED AND SIXTY-THREE DAYS IF ACTIVISM

I really enjoyed this line: “I think a leader shows up, does the job, brings the people along and tries to make a case.”¹ That was my mission. October 31, 2022, I had a vapor rub tub in my nose as a self treatment to the RSVirus, and I was able to envision a center where we would create our citadel of information. This became a seed to a year-long passion of finding the cracks in my district, notifying the proper authorities, and when they were notified I asked about their protocol to correct the wrong to provide guidelines for future neighbors who had similar complaints but when I asked my questions I received the same answer, in different variations— “that isn’t my job”, I had just realized the extent to which our trunk services, health, technology, city services, insurance, and education, rely on the managerial services of each citizen in those professional roles. People who are overwhelmed and reach out I get overwhelmed when experts start stating that so I tried to fill in the gap. How could I find a sustainable way to fill in the gap?

Well, I started to see the big issue. In November 2022, the migrant crisis, the release of chat gpt to the public, and the Ukrainian war: three pivotal events I could do more research about and inform people about. The intersectionality was the key to my project, what was the bigger picture and how could I emphasize that all of these are woven together socially, politically, economically. So I delved into the literature of Socratic schools, Democratic schools, I downloaded all the material from Yale and I started organizing, which readings and notes could I revisit, which teachers are working on these three issues. Are these actually issues my district cares about? Why my district? Well the federal government, my representation came from the 6th. So I created the five point plan. I circulated this information in various ways depending on the audience. I targeted at least one school in each neighborhood and I cold emailed Deans, principals, teachers, alerting them to be aware of these five issues and that if they would allow me to introduce them to the Civic Education Basics. Everything we wanted as kids was a set of guidelines of adulthood and people kept saying well the answer is life but in actuality all the adults were drowning because they did not know about all the basics to keep a family together.

Immigrants are coming in and they need family. Who is family here? What does family even look like? Across cultures and what is the culture like in my neighborhood.

So I was inspired by Robert Moses to make a symbol of Queens be the center of the world. So here was this seed of a center, a cultural center for all cultures, a beacon of primary knowledge of the people for the people.

This all stemmed from misinformation and privacy. We lack trust in our agencies, in our schools and in our neighbors because we cannot even trust our own hands. What are we typing? Who tracked my ridiculous question? Will that random Google search be harmful in the future? Social norms change and the reflections of the past decade has allowed us to engage with the effects of social media, rapid technological changes, and psychological effects of people of all ages across the cultures.

Therefore, we tackle it not through education, we know that is a mess, but through the actual system. I wanted to spice up the system and make people question if our democracy is still being kept to the high standard the founding fathers wanted. However, the special elections during the most contentious time for these neighboring boroughs sharing one seat in the New York State assembly had a 2% turnout and the difference was 500 votes with the winning seat 2400 votes out of 63000 eligible voters in the seat representing 172,000 people. I fell in love with this assembly district. I could not officially run because I was not part of this district but I did silently protest it with students. I gathered the youth from the connections I made in each neighborhood in this district and I showed them the five point bipartisan plan. It was to teach people how to do a write in by providing them the names of the candidates and a big mark with my name and website to describe issues and check polling sites. I hosted a three day workshop where we covered these issues. One day in a library in each neighborhood. The topics covered the five point plan: 1) unregulated vehicles 2) keeping tracking of nonviolent crimes 3) AI 4) Rikers Island 5) monopoly of con-edison

Again this was the special elections, exactly one month before October 7. It was always necessary to show bipartisan support because the conservative ticket was a rabbi in an assembly seat where there are affluent trump supporters and the democrats ticket was also Jewish and from St. John's law. I did not want to hurt the race but it was a moment when checks and balances were weak because the numbers were too low to even be able to protest.

Then Oct 7 happens and I want to reach out to my connections again but the adults fall through the cracks and I keep hearing the same responses. Reach out to the council.

I wanted to understand the Jewish community in Kew Gardens intimately so I could understand the black Pomonok population, and the hispanic, mostly newly arrived immigrants of College point, with the long-time home owners and pro-Trumpers of Malba and Whitestone. Wow, an amazing location. There should have been articles written about this location. I did write. Everyday. I wrote about the people I met, the people's experiences with the system not for its cruelty but for its inefficiency and lack of proper leadership. We, the United States of America, should not be holding up all these standards of life that revert us to conduct inhumane practices. How is it possible that we allow criminals into the country, yes that is true, I witnessed it first hand with a newly arrived immigrant committing fraud and raping me, but I still continue my passion for public service and that only fueled me to show that compassion can create cracks for others to fall and cheat the good system of the US of A.

My mother would tell me ways that stranger neighbors helped. I enjoyed using the term stranger neighbor because they were the kind people you met in your life that you may never encounter but the exchange was more than asking for some flour, it was connecting of souls where one stranger soul allowed the other to hold its hand and exchange trauma. I loved all my stranger neighbors because when I got hurt, these were the friends I had.

So I was silently protesting by advocating for myself.

- Do you know the different types of courts if someone hurts you and is fraudulent with you? You may have to go to three courts. Maybe a fourth if your finances are a mess. This is not legal advice but just paths to more information.

I want to create a box with people's identities or city cards and you seal it in a way that you seal a piggy bank and you identify all people with their own personal number, just for their eyes and you can even give them a card. This is where they can feel safe to harbor their information. This is the black vault of citizens. — How can you make them create this for themselves? You teach them how to advocate for themselves.

This is a large task and it takes effort but when you have passion then you can make waterfalls feel like soft rain. The pressure is completely off because you float from adrenaline in your veins.

I do not know much but I do know what I have been a primary source to and I want to make my story legitimate, record it for those who need to get better help especially when agencies and others in the system are taking advantage of the cracks in New York City; KCE will keep them accountable, I have spent months gathering intelligence for the U.S. Congressional SIXTH District.
